Dictator Warning to Weak May Later Include Strong.

Sing any song often enough and people will get tired of it. The peril to freedom represented by the triumph of the Fascist block in Europe has been chanted so much lately that a number of good Americans are getting a bit weary and are asking why someone doesn't put on a new record.

That reaction is only natural. It is natural, too, for Americans to wonder if the peril isn't pretty much exaggerated. After all, the Atlantic ocean is still wide, and what goes on inside the borders of such a country as Germany, for instance, isn't any of our business; why should we lose any sleep over the fact that Fascism grows stronger rather than weaker on its own home grounds?

A good part of the answer to this kind of question is being supplied these days by the Nazis themselves.

You may have noticed the other day how Josef Terboven, a Nazi district leader and governor of the Rhineland, let off a blast warning Germany's neighbors that they must mind their p's and q's.

Germany, says Herr Terboven, not long ago publicly warned certain small states that they were getting too cocky and aggressive. One of these small states, Czechoslovakia, refused to listen—and paid the penalty. Other states might profit by her experience.

"If, for instance," continued Herr Terboven, "one looks at certain newspapers here in the west, in Luxembourg or the Netherlands, one is surprised anew at the impudence with which the press meddles in the most private matters of Germany, an impudence coupled with ignorance and an attitude of superiority."

"We say to responsible statesmen of these states: 'Either you take measures soon which are calculated to bring the nations closer together, or these nations must soon day pay for having extended freedom of the press to a small clique.'"

It is impossible to read that without feeling that what happens inside the borders of an aggressive totalitarian state is most decidedly a matter of concern to citizens of a democracy.

For this statement is simply a blunt warning: muzzle your press and curtail your own freedom, or expect trouble from us.

Today the warning is directed at weak states. Is there any reason to suppose that it will not be directed at stronger ones, as soon as the Nazi strategists feel that it is safe?

There can be no international harmony as long as one nation claims the right to order the domestic affairs of other nations. And that is where the real menace in the rise of the Nazi-Fascist bloc lies. If those states were willing to operate on a live-and-let-live basis it would be different—but they aren't. Because they aren't, Americans cannot remain wholly indifferent to what happens overseas.

A Book a Day By Bruce Catton

If you will recall something of the grandeur and the swashbuckling period that was the Elizabethan quest of British history, you have home hint of the story James A. Williamson has written in "The Age of Drake" (Macmillan, $3).

A new account of the incredible activities of this swagging "sea dog" and his contemporaries has long been urgently needed. Mr. Williamson says at the outset, and accordingly he has set his story against the full backdrop of the period. The book is especially significant since it is based very largely on many new research discoveries.

The age of Drake was a new age for England, ushering in a wealth of geographical discoveries, opening up new vistas of commerce, reign new markets whetted to merchants, new culture gripped the people and new glory challenged the empire. Naturally, of course, the empire turned toward the sea and there found abundant spoils. Drake, Raleigh, Grenville, Hawkins, Forbisher and the rest of them swept everything before their rolling battlewagons. In the end they vanquished the Spanish Armada and the sea lanes were open to the British in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. The age of Drake had wedged England to the waters for generations to come.

Such is Mr. Williamson's story, but he has by no means confined himself to the drama of the period. He has thrown new light on the policies and the propaganda of the time as well.—P.G.F.

Persistent Hoarseness Demands An Examination By a Specialist

Among the most common of all disturbances is hoarseness of the voice which of course, is usually associated with some sort of disturbance in the larynx or voice box. In many instances mere rest and refusal to use the voice for some time will bring about improvement.

On the other hand, the causes of this condition are varied and some of them may represent the nidus of a serious disease. Certainly persistent hoarseness should demand an immediate direct examination of the vocal cords and of the larynx by a physician who specializes in such conditions. Anyone who is hoarse for as long as a month should certainly have not only a direct examination of the throat, but also a complete physical examination to determine the presence of any constitutional disease.

There are many factors which may affect the sound of the voice. Sometimes it is muffled or thick as a result of an inflammation in the nose or in the sinuses or as a result of a swelling in the throat. A cure of these conditions will result in restoring to the voice its normal resonance.

In order to have a voice that is normal, the vocal cords must come together as they do under normal conditions. Their tension must be normal and they must be vibrated in the normal manner. An interference with any one of these conditions will produce a change in the voice.

Among the factors which may produce swelling and inflammation of the vocal cords or of the throat are the presence of venereal disease. The most dangerous of all of the conditions is, of course, cancer, although cancer of the larynx fortunately is a rather unusual condition. The examination for the presence of cancer must include a direct examination of the vocal cords in action which only a physician with the proper instruments is capable of making. It is not possible for the average person to examine his own cords; neither is it possible to have a friend look at the vocal cords. Special instruments and apparatus are necessary for this purpose.

In the vast majority of cases cancer is neglected. An investigation has shown that 82 per cent of cases of cancer of the larynx if discovered early are curable, but unfortunately 90 per cent of all the patients with cancer of the larynx die of the disease. This is proof of the fact that the condition is neglected in its early stages.

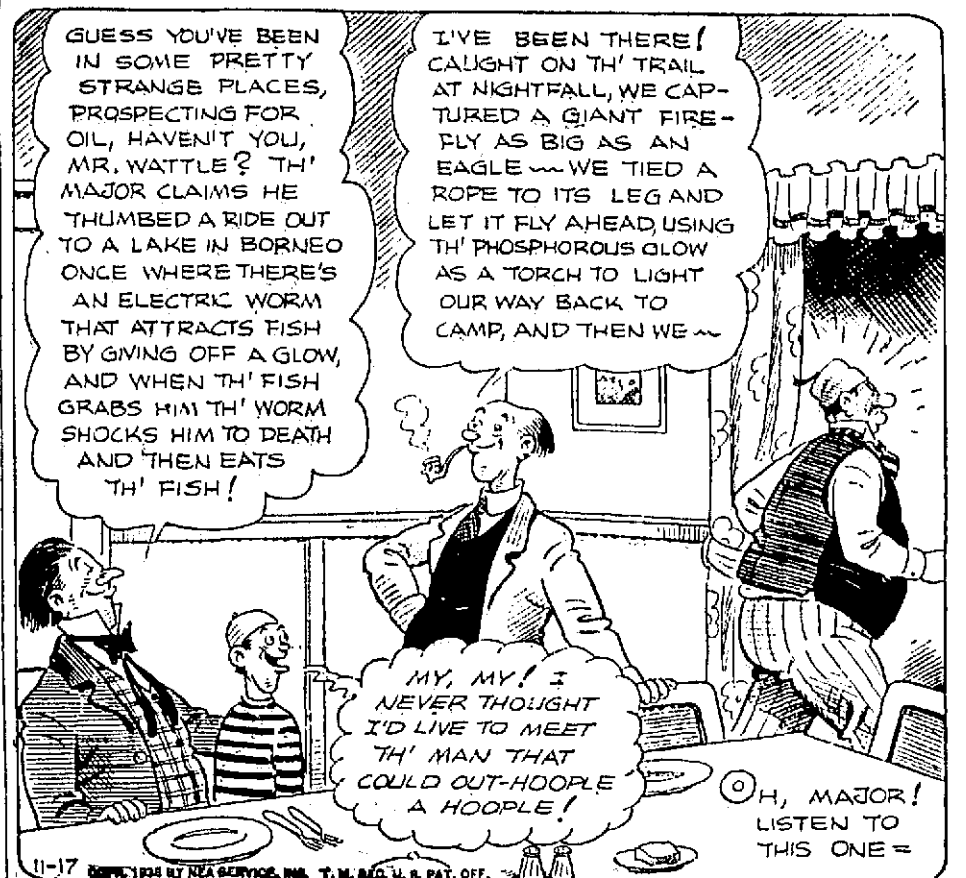

Tuberculosis of the larynx is a more common condition and is unfortunately often associated with tuberculosis of the lungs. For that reason the slightest indication of tuberculosis of the larynx should demand a complete study of the patient's chest, including all of the usual physical examination as well as the taking of X-ray pictures. In tuberculosis of the larynx the constant coughing and expectoration and pain of swallowing are serious signs of danger. Venereal disease may attack the vocal cords as well as any other part of the body. In the presence of syphilis with extensive manifestation of the disease elsewhere in the body, constant hoarseness should indicate that the disease may also have attacked the vocal cords.

There are also conditions affecting the vocal cords which are related to conditions affecting the muscles of the body resulting in the appearance of weakness soon after the muscles begin to be used. In such cases the voice gives out after having been used for 30 minutes or more.

Politicians Discuss Double Primary Law

LITTLE ROCK — (AP) — Apparent adoption at the November 8 general election of a constitutional amendment which, among other things, would require a double primary system, brought discussion among politicians Wednesday over the question of whether the legislature can amend or repeal such an initiated measure.

A section of the state's initiative and referendum amendment under which the double primary amendment was presented to the voters says:

"No measure approved by a vote of the people shall be amended or repealed by the general assembly . . . except upon a yeas and nays vote on roll call of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house of the general assembly."

Methodists Talk of Hendrix Plans

Bishop Hints Conference to Work on Major Matters

CAMDEN, Ark. — (AP) — Bishop C. C. Selman hinted Wednesday that the Little Rock conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, annual session here, would be called upon to consider a matter of major importance relating to Hendrix College, church-supported school at Conway.

In his opening address to the conference the bishop said "a better day is drawing for the institution." Later in the day he suggested action be deferred on a building program plan "because we have something of much more importance concerning Hendrix College."

He did not amplify either statement. The deferred proposal came from the conference board of Christian education, recommending an immediate campaign for funds to construct a women's dormitory and chapel on the Hendrix campus. It was made a special order for business Friday morning.

The conference elected four delegates to the national conference at Kansas City at which the three major branches of Methodism will be united into one church. The delegates were J. M. C. C. Selman, J. H. Rock, conference lay leader, C. H. Hollis, Warren, Fred Moore, Pine Bluff; Mrs. J. M. Stinson, Camden; the Rev. C. M. Reeves, pastor of the First church Camden; the Rev. J. M. Hammond, presiding elder of the Little Rock district; the Rev. E. C. Rule, presiding elder of the Camden district; and Clem Baker, executive secretary of the board of education.

Bishop Selman urged the church to take the lead in bringing about a better day for the South. He told the delegates he "blushed with shame every time I pass houses in which these sharecroppers and tenants live."

SERIAL STORY LOVERS AWEIGH

BY BETTY WALLACE
COPYRIGHT, 1938 NEA SERVICE, INC.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
JUDY, A L. C. O. P. — admiral's daughter. She faced a choice between two navy suitors.
JACK HANLEY — flying sailor. He faced a test of a patient love.
MARVEL, H. A. S. T. I. N. G. — navy wife. She faced the test of being a good sailor.

Yesterday, Dwight and Marvel took her to the maid of honor at their wedding — the wedding of the man she loved.

CHAPTER X

WHILE Judy stood there, staring at them, her heart was beating thunderously. Her throat was bathed in color. How dared they! In Marvel's eyes was glinting amusement, wicked triumph; that she had added this crowning insult to all the others. Maid of honor at the wedding, which would marry the man she loved to this red-haired, green-eyed heir.

For a moment Judy wanted to let the words that crowded to her lips fly them and scorch them. She wanted to beat against the smugness of their complacency; she wanted to tell them the bitter things that stirred in her heart.

But of course, she couldn't. She knew that in a second. No matter what she said, she'd have to be polite. So, to gain a few minutes in which to get back her self-control, she turned her back to them and led the way into the living room. She fixed a cushion on the sofa, and bent to pick a fallen book.

Then she smiled at Marvel. Her face felt stiff, but she knew the smile looked all right. "How kind of you, Miss Hastings!" she said. "I never dreamed you'd want me. I expected, of course, it would be some friend you'd known a long time."

Dwight was twirling his cap. Judy turned her eyes on him, mercilessly. "But of course—if there's no one else you might ask—no one but this girl who couldn't come."

He burst out, "I wanted you, Judy. You've always been so swell to me."

"Yes," said Marvel. "It was Dwight's idea."

"I'd really have to think about it," said Judy slowly. "I'd love to—of course—but there are—many things. . . ." Her voice trailed off. She despised herself for the coolness of her voice, for the lies she was telling them. But every lie was barbed. Marvel knew that Judy would turn her down. Maybe Marvel had known all the time. Maybe this was just her own idea of having a little fun with the queer Navy girl Dwight had been interested in.

JUDY went into the hall, murmuring, "I must tell Mother," and she struggled with her inward rage for a second before she entered the kitchen. "Mother," she said, "Dwight and Marvel have asked me to be their maid of honor."

Her mother's worn, but still beautiful, face mirrored surprise. Judy patted her mother's hand swiftly. "I don't want to, darling," she said. "But you tell them. Tell them I can't."

Dwight rose to his feet punctiliously as Mrs. Alcott entered. "How are you, Mrs. Alcott? You're looking well."

"Thank you, Dwight," she said. He had called too many times for her to abide by the formal "Lieutenant." She greeted Marvel with that graciousness which was so lovely a part of her social gifts. Judy felt proud of her then. But she was always proud of Mother. She thought came to her that even if Dwight ever reached the rank of admiral, Marvel would never grace his position the way Mother graced Daddy's.

Mrs. Alcott was saying, "How kind and sweet of you to ask Judy, Miss Hastings! But on such short notice, I—well, I—planned a trip—"

"Smile," said Marvel. "Lieutenant Hanley has been trying to persuade Judy to take a little jaunt to Pensacola, and in that case, she couldn't be back in time."

It was polite, meaningless, the refusal that Mother knew so well how to give. But at the mention of Jack's name, Judy felt her hands shake. Mother was so wise. Her kind eyes saw everything. Maybe Jack had even told her, before Judy got home from the shopping trip with Diane, that he wanted to take her to Pensacola. . . . The more she thought of it, the surer she grew. He had told her.

But she wouldn't speak of it to Mother. They were very close, and yet there were some things that lay between them unspoken. Judy felt, sadly, that Mother wanted her to accept Jack. Mother had seen Dwight only a few times before she recognized his inherent climber's spirit. And Jack—Jack was the sort of officer Daddy had been.

Dwight and Marvel left soon afterward, murmuring the proper things, and Judy stood at the door with her mother and said, "You must come and see us again." But she wanted never to see either one of them as long as she lived.

THE door closed. There was silence in the house. Judy said, slowly, "Thank you, Mother."

Her mother looked at her very directly. "Judy, I wouldn't have permitted it under any circumstances." Then they went into the living room together, and Mrs. Alcott said, "Come here, pudd'n." That was Judy's baby pet name. Tears stung her eyes. She wanted suddenly to throw herself into her mother's arms and sob. Everything was so complicated. So cruel. If she could just bury her face in Mother's breast and tell her all the doubts and fears which tormented her. Even now—even now, as he rode back to the hotel with his fiancée—she loved Dwight so much that it was tearing her apart. She loved his eyes, and the way his hair grew, and the big, blunt fingers that had twirled the gold and silver eagled cap. He had no right to ask her this thing. Yet she loved him still. Her chest hurt with the bottled-up sob. She faced her mother dry-eyed and still, but she knew that Mother was not deceived.

"Jack Hanley told you he was leaving for Pensacola?" her mother asked in a quiet voice.

"Yes."

The soft hand touched her cheek. "You didn't—didn't try to stop him? Oh, Judy!"

"I couldn't, Mother!" The rebellion, the frustrated emptiness, came through the cry.

"You're so young, child," her mother said, smoothing the soft, pale hair. "So young and unhappy. Poor child. Poor little pudd'n." Her eyes were thoughtful, above the girl's head. Then she said, "I can't see you going on this way, Judy. I can't. I know he mustn't leave. So I phoned your father at his office. He will speak to the admiral of the fleet. In the morning, those orders will be revoked. Jack is entitled to shore duty, but he can serve it just as well on North Island. For a few weeks he must stay where he is. You'll both come to your senses."

"Mother!" Never before had she known of a time when Mother in any way influenced a decision of the admiral's, or asked him to use his influence with other officers. And to prevent Jack from going to Pensacola when he had requested it. . . . Her face burned. He'd know why those orders had been revoked.

But her mother only said, with a little smile, "Darling, I did the best I could. I'll work out. You'll be glad I did it, some day." (To Be Continued)

RAISING A FAMILY

By Olive Roberts Barton

Not All Boys Insist on "Pitching Woo" As Price of Companionship With Girls

The high school dance is to be on Friday. Here it is Wednesday, and no one has asked sixteen-year-old Jane to escort her.

Mrs. Brown has gone to great trouble to get Jane a new dress. The rose maine with its gay corsage and gitch, hangs in the closet without hope of invitation. The silver sandals, wrapped in back paper, seem to anticipate permanent mourning Mrs. Brown's tears as well as Jane's are alert for the telephone. But Jane knows. All the girls have already been flaunting their invitations and most of the boys are gone. Who is left but, Andy? And, yes, there's Bud, of course. But he has probably asked ten girls by this time and been turned down.

The telephone calls on Thursday are from a man for daddy, the woman from the store, a neighbor calling to say that the Reading club has been postponed. No one calls Jane. Jane says nothing and pretends to have aheadance. "Good thing I'm not going to the dances tomorrow," she ventures. "These headaches always hang on so."

Mrs. Brown is suffering more than Jane. All her life she had been able to get her what she wanted or needed. And Jane, herself, has had her world to date pretty well licked. She has had everything but boys who wanted to take her to dances, in spite of the fact that Jane is rather pretty and a good dancer.

She knew what "it" meant. She knew that some of the girls necked. They called it "pitching a little woo." That was all right with her. She didn't do it herself. She had been brought up to think such things cheap and wrong. Now she blamed her conscience and her mother a little. "I'delphia."

wish I hadn't been preached at so much," she thought. "If dad and mother hadn't been so intent on my being a lady and a noble one, I might think differently and act the way other girls act." But she knew she wouldn't anyway, in her heart. She couldn't hear to buy her way to parties that way. "I won't pay toll," she stormed silently.

No Need to Pay "Toll" for Dates

Thursday night, late, Bud called. Jane said she would go with him as though she might have said "Yes, I'll go to the library with you." But Bud and Jane knew that it was merely a case of left-overs being scraped to gether. All the allure had gone out of the dance.

Then Jane's mother did a wise thing. She called "Jane, dear, I want you. See here. Boys are not all silly. Many of them feel as you do about this pitting. Why don't you try being to the dances tomorrow," she ventures. "These headaches always hang on so."

Mrs. Brown is suffering more than Jane. All her life she had been able to get her what she wanted or needed. And Jane, herself, has had her world to date pretty well licked. She has had everything but boys who wanted to take her to dances, in spite of the fact that Jane is rather pretty and a good dancer.

I was quite concerned when Hitler failed to rally for fourteen hours from a morphine sleep after an operation—Dr. Carl von Eicken, German surgeon, addressing the Interstate Post graduate Medical Association in Philadelphia.

Famous Phoneys Prove Gullible Humans Will Swallow Tall Tales

By NEA Service
Some terrible catastrophes never happened.

Most people believe what they're told; it's easier to believe than to think and weigh and question. That's why mistakes, false reports and downright hoaxes sometimes bring stranger results than the event that didn't occur.

The great Martain invasion of 1938 came pretty close to a high mark in human gullibility. But while federal authorities pondered what to do, if anything, about Orson Welles' radio presentation of "War of the Worlds" they might remember that such mass reaction as was demonstrated the night before Halloween is nothing new.

Zoo Break (Didn't Happen)
There was the time all New York thought the animals had broken out of the zoo.

The city was a panic. Business ceased. People bared their doors. Mothers rushed to schools to bring home their children. Many fled to roof tops. For three days in sight of an alley cat scuttling over a fence was enough to start a panic.

What caused it all? The New York Herald had been campaigning for a stronger and safer cages in the zoo. No body paid any attention to reported editorials. So Nov. 9, 1934, the Herald devoted its front page to a (wholly imaginary) story of that the entire population of the zoo had escaped. Terrifying tales of policemen torn limb from limb by tigers, and stealthy beasts stalking orphan asylums were reported in detail. Way down at the end of the story was the explanation: they were telling what would happen "if."

But almost nobody bothered to read that far. They skimmed the headlines and leading paragraphs and lit out of the nearest tree.

The Herald soon won back its endangered reputation for veracity, the zoo got a new cages, and people gradually got back their wits.

Modern readers need only recall the furor of the quite genuine Lindbergh flight of 1927 to imagine how the country was thrilled by the story in the New York Sun in 1944. It told how a marvelous balloon trip across the Atlantic had been successfully made one block Mason. The scientific as well as the popular world was stirred to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

But it subsided very quickly when it became known that Edgar Allan Poe, a rising young poet and critic, had manufactured the entire story, partly in the spirit of good, clean fun, and partly because he needed the money. Poe's "balloon hoax" has become a classic.

Guest Nobility (Not So Noble)
Easiest way to deceive Americans has always been to pose as a foreign nobleman or "European big shot". Many have done it, but none more successfully than Georgi R. Gabor, Jr., a 21-year-old Hungarian student who wanted to see America—and had no money.

But he had brains and faith in people's gullibility. So in 1926 he came to New York and registered at a leading hotel as "Baron G. F. E. von Krupp, Jr." Immediately he was interviewed, invited to dinners and receptions by social registers. Though in America "to study industrial conditions," he expressed an eagerness to see West Point, and was not only taken there, but the whole cadet corps paraded before him.

He was conducted through Thomas Edison's laboratories, Pittsburgh steel works, Akron rubber factories, the Ford Plant in Detroit. Not until he had been taken all the way to the west coast was he caught at Albuquerque, N.M., on a bad check charge.

At a time when channel swimming was much in the public eye, one Dorothy Logan climbed wearily out of the Chantill surf at Folkestone, England, early one October morning. She collapsed, and announced that she had just swum from France in an hour and twenty minutes less time than Getrude Ederle had required.

She became a national heroine. England positively palpitated with pride, until one day Miss Logan broke down and admitted that she had rowed across entering the water just off the English coast.

She wanted to prove how gullible people would be in the throes of vogue for channel swimming.

Cardiff Giant (Big Grag)
Barum's epochal discovery that people like to be fooled was never better illustrated than in the case of the Cardiff Giant.

George Hul, a Binghamton, N.Y., tobaccoist, and a notorious hoaxer, had stonemasons chisel roughly in the rock the figure of a giant ten and a half feet long. He buried it on the farm of a relative, and had it "found."

Such eminent men as Oliver Wendell Holmes and Ralph Waldo Emerson were taken in, but geologists immediately pronounced it an arrant fake.

Nevertheless the public loved it. Barum made $150,000 carting it around and exhibiting it.

While such deliberate fakes as the Cardiff Giant or the Ballon Hoax are not in the class with the Wells broadcast, all derived their force from the fact that people read, look, and listen all too carelessly for their own good.

Paul Harrison in Hollywood

From Ireland to Stardom in 13 Days, Only a Fitzgerald Could Do That HOLLYWOOD—Among stage people the world over are tales of how the movie studios lure earnest players here and then let them languish in well-paid idleness until they're all but forgotten by audiences back home. Geraldine Fitzgerald had heard such stories and was determined that it wouldn't happen to her.

It didn't. Exactly 13 days after leaving her home in Ireland she was working before the cameras as the second lead, under Bette Davis, in "Dark Victory."

It really all began back in 1930 when Miss Fitzgerald was 15 and a student at the Dublin Art School. She painted, and was very serious about it. Next, she thought, would come a few more years of study in Paris or Rome, or maybe London. So when she was ready to graduate all that the Dublin teachers had to offer, she asked, "Where should I go from here?"

An instructor said, "Frankly, you had better go out and get married."

So she went out and got a job on the stage. An aunt, Shelagh Richards, was a leading lady at the Abbey Theater, so Miss Fitzgerald tried the Gaiety Theater. For two years she took any role that came along.

Finally a British movie scout came along and offered her contract. Her first picture, "Turn of the Tide," made her a star. Her second, "Mill on the Floss," brought an offer to appear in Shaw's "Heartbreak House" on Broadway.

Up to this point in her narrative, the small, dark Irish girl had smoked four cigarettes. We were sitting in the Warner cafe, and she toyed with a bowl of mushroom soup. Already lean, she is loyally starving herself, and hates it.

"When the play turned out to be a hit," continued Miss Fitzgerald, tapping her fifth cigarette, "American picture offers began to come in. But all I had to say to discourage the agents was that I wouldn't accept more than a six-months' contract. Then Warner Brothers surprised me by agreeing to it."

Here where the actress was smart. Instead of rushing right out to Hollywood, she packed her trunks and went home to Ireland. The studio was surprised, not to say dumfounded. Nobody ever had behaved like that before.

Waited Until Hollywood Cabled
But Miss Fitzgerald was determined not to be idle in Talkietown. Right away she began getting letters from the studio. "They didn't sound insistent enough," she chuckled. "Besides, a letter takes quite a while to get to Ireland, so I judged they weren't exactly in a hurry. Finally, though, I got a cable demanding that I report immediately."

She grabbed a ship for New York, paused there a day and took a train for California. From Los Angeles she rushed to the Burbank studio, was tested, accepted and assigned to "Dark Victory."

With my extra pencil, Miss Fitzgerald doddled on the tablecloth. Just designs and swirls and something that looked a little like a face. That's all that left of her art school education. Over her sixth cigarette, she declared that she doesn't like California. True, she hasn't seen much of it yet—not the mountains or the ocean or Clark Gable or anything. I guessed it was because everything is so near and brown at this time of year—not like Ireland. Or maybe she wants leprechauns.

Porkers Ignore Lead, Try to Pass, Go Down to Defeat in Final Period

Substitute Intercepts Pass and Runs for Touchdown That Gives Mississippi Win, 20 to 14—Fist Fight at Finish

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Arkansas played a football game that was as reckless, wild and free as the great open spaces of the Southwest conference territory and because of it, was licked by Ole Miss, 20 to 14, here Wednesday.

Disdaining to protect a 14-to-6 lead, and later a 14 to 13 advantage, these high-shooting Razorbacks kept firing passes and two of them boomeranged into Ole Miss touchdowns in the last half.

Fist Fight at Finish
The story of the game wasn't all on the football field, however, for after the game Arkansas and Ole Miss players flung fists freely in a battle around the Ole Miss bench and one Ole Miss substitute was knocked cold by a well-aimed right. The incident may have been provoked by a tackle by Winkie Autrey of Ole Miss that sent Zack Smith of Frederick, Okla., Arkansas end, to the hospital suffering from a slight concussion and a badly bruised nose.

Autrey was the particular target of the Arkansas fist offensive at the end, but remained unscathed. The game was rough from beginning to end, although few penalties were assessed.

Thumbs Nose at Porkers
The Smith incident brought the flareup but the deciding touchdown, scored by Bill Schneller of Ole Miss, fifted the spark. For Schneller ran 54 yards to the score and for the last 30 was turned half around and thumbing his nose at the Arkansas team.

That touchdown came on an intercepted pass from the hands of Ralph Atwood near the start of the fourth quarter when Arkansas was leading 14-to-13 and passing didn't seem to be the thing to do. In the Southeastern Conference such leads are protected. In the Southwest they aren't and Arkansas earned the admiration of a crowd of 12,000 for its willingness to take a chance.

Arkansas Scores in Second
This Razorback team moved well both on land and air. Gloyd Lyon scored the first touchdown on a straight ground attack. Zack Smith scored the second on a pass from Lyon. Both came in the second quarter and Frank Mosely followed both with conversions.

All three of Ole Miss touchdowns were from the air. Ends Jesse Ward and Ham Murphy taking one a piece and Schneller the other. Parker Hall threw all of the touchdown passes and five more completed ones and played a sterling game. But he missed one of his three tries for extra points.

Rebels First to Score
Ole Miss drew first blood with a 68-yard march. Capt. Kim Bradley of Ole Miss covered Atwood's fumble on the Arkansas 32. Hall turned ends for 21 yards, then passed to Johnny Whitington for a net gain of 24 yards to take the ball to the 27. Then Hall passed straight down the middle to Ham Murphy who dropped across the goal line.

Arkansas was being pushed around considerably, then took to doing some pushing themselves. Dud Mays, a truly fine tackle, covered a fumble by Hall on the Ole Miss 45 and Arkansas, using a play through the middle and varying with end around plays worked the ball steadily down the field, using Gloyd Lyon, Hickey, Britt and Martin on the way. Lyon went over for the score and Arkansas led.

Smith Makes Great Catch
Two minutes later they had another. A quick kick by Lyon for 60 yards set Ole Miss back and Arkansas got the ball on its own 36. Lyon threw a 20-yard pass down the middle to Smith who snatched the ball from Hall and Ern Smith, turned and beat it the remaining 44 yards to a touchdown. It was a beautifully executed play.

Prescott Crippled for DeQueen Game

Three Stars May Be Out of Lineup on Friday Night

FRESCOTT—The Curly Wolves of this week preparing for the invasion of the DeQueen High School Leopards, minus the services of Baker, Harvey, and Halseil.

Baker and Harvey are injured while Halseil has been put on the sidelines until the entanglement about his transfer of transcript has been cleared up.

No action has been taken by the A. A. A. but the local school authorities will not permit his participation until the matter is cleared up. Regardless of the seasons records the Leopard-Wolves battle is always an outstanding one, and this year will prove no exception. The teams meet at 8 p. m. Friday.

Pro Cage Team to Play at Prescott

Ozark Hill Billies to Appear at Prescott on November 21

PRESCOTT—The Ozark Hill Billies, a touring girls professional team, will appear in Prescott on Monday, November 21, against an all-star Men's team composed of ex-college and high school stars.

The Hill Billies are this year exhibiting "Jumping Joe" Savotich who is declared by experts to be the outstanding ball handler and trickster on the hardwood courts today. He also plays part time, and is by himself worth the small admission charged to see this added attraction.

This being the first basketball attraction in this section a capacity crowd is expected to fill the spacious new gym.

The pathetic condition of Germany's military system now becomes apparent. They are down to their last red-haired spy.

Football players at the larger universities may be required to learn to count to four as a result of a referee's permitting a fifth down.

Mighty Texas Christian Grid Squad Dominates All-Southwest Selections

By POP BOONE
NEA Service Special Correspondent

FORT WORTH—There are a number of football experts in the southwest who would make an easy job of picking a sectional honor team, merely by naming the Texas Christian varsity en toto.

Although a consensus isn't quite so flattering, the Horned Frogs finally wind up with three men on the first team, and Dutch Meyer's entire line is named somewhere among the first three teams.

Named as the outstanding choice in the district, and one upon which all observers concur, is Davey O'Brien. The T. C. U. 150-pound quarterback not only is a smart field general but is recognized as the passing equal of Sammy Baugh at a comparative point in the latter's career.

At the halves are Elmer Tarbox of Texas Tech and Dick Todd of Texas A. & M. Tarbox has starred for two years with the Red Raiders, who are undefeated this season.

A fast, dynamic runner, gritics rate him one of the hardest men to stop ever seen in the district.

Todd Rates Higher
Todd, the finest triple-threat back in the southwest, actually is All-America caliber, according to most observers, but the Aggies' spotty season probably will keep him from national honors.

Kay Eakin, Arkansas' junior, gets the fourth post in the mythical backfield. Playing with a club that has had a run of tough luck, Eakin has been the most dangerous man on the field.

Sam Boyd, Baylor's great pass-snatching end, is a popular choice at one flank, and pairs up with Billy Dewell, Southern Methodist junior, who should be headed for the top next year.

Gigantic I. B. Hale, 240 pounds of smashing tackle, has his post all to himself. The Texas Christian captain's play this season stamps him as a definite All-America possibility. As a running mate, Hale has Joe Boyd, Texas A. & M. junior, a devastating lineman whose bulk belies his speed.

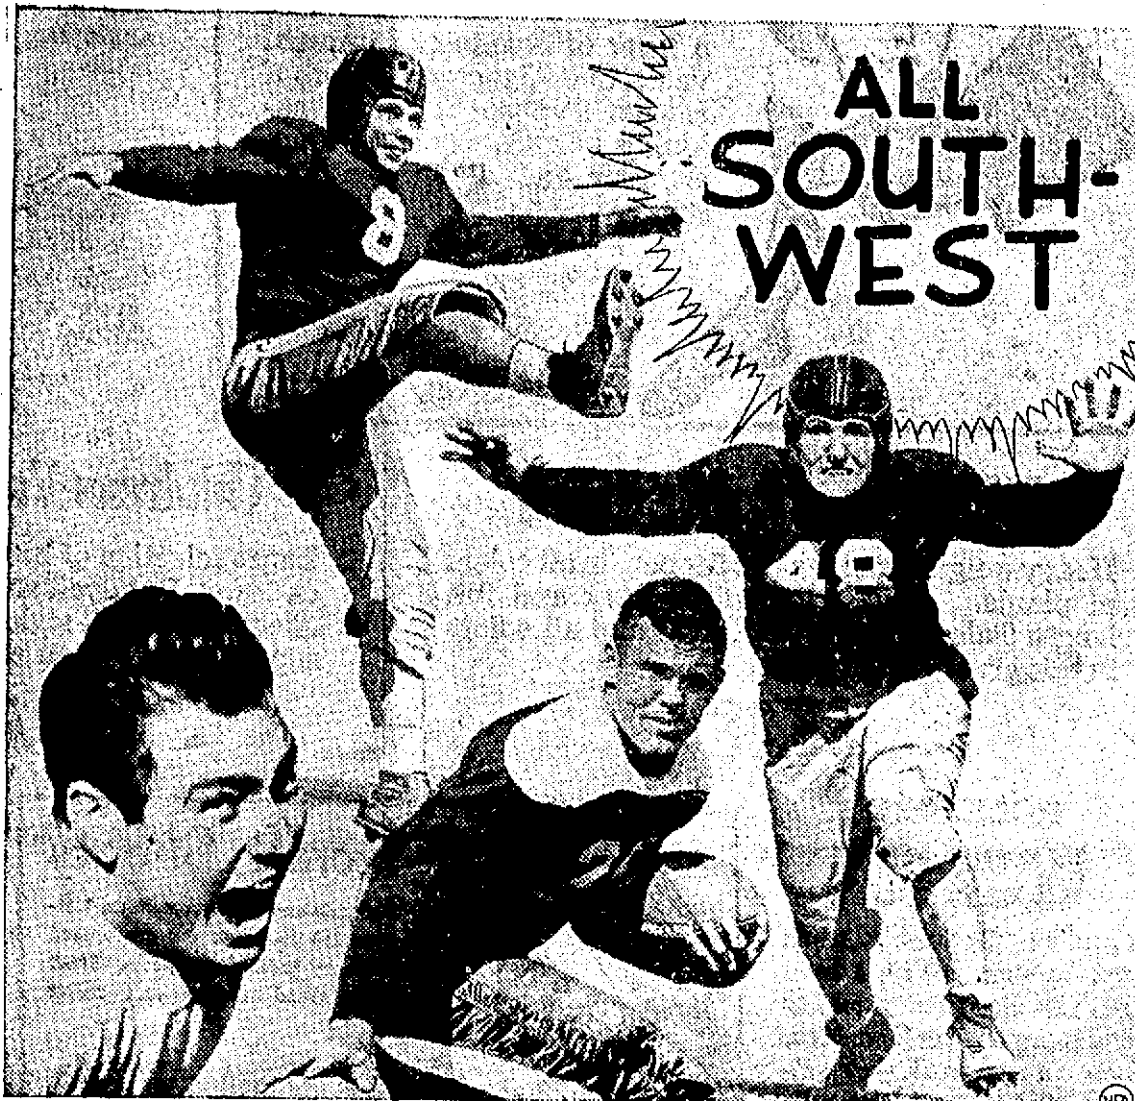

At guards are Matt Landry, outstanding man in the Rice forward wall and Jack Rhodes of Texas. Both weigh close to the 200-pound mark, and in addition to possessing slashing defensive ability, are particularly adept at pulling out to run interference.

Aldrich Great Center
Ki Aldrich of Texas Christian, considered by many to be the greatest center ever developed in the southwest, is a unanimous choice for the pivot job.

Standing more than six feet and weighing 200 pounds; Aldrich not only was the backbone of the Horned Frog defense, but often performed the almost unheard of feat of pulling out to run interference after snapping the ball.

There are a host of others who pressed closely for first team positions, but fell just a trifle short.

Billy Patterson of Baylor, one of the truly great passers to come out of the southwest, almost was placed in the first backfield. Bill Dwyer of New Mexico has few peers as a ball carrier. Ollie Cordill, Rice halfback, far overshadowed his teammate, Ernie Lain, who was nominated for stardom in pre-season predictions. Jack Schuchel of Rice probably could play fullback for any team in the land.

Forrest Kline of T. C. U. and George Sanders of Southern Methodist would make a swell brace of guards for any coach, and Lerry Woodell of Arkansas rates with the best when it comes to centering.

It isn't so simple picking an honor team in the razzle-dazzle country, where the stars shine their brightest.

Cage Practice to Begin November 28

Coach Glen Rose to Have Tallest Squad in History

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark.—(AP)—With only two letter men returning, the University of Arkansas will start training November 28 for the defense of its 1938 Southwest Conference basketball championship.

Coach Glen Rose will have the tallest squad in history. None of the 12 candidates are six feet or over. Seven members of last year's freshman squad are considered especially promising. Veterans returning will be Capt. Neil Martin, forward, and Leslie Hagood, center. Reserves from last year are Willard Thorpe, guard and Glen Smith, forward. Oscar Caris, a 1938 squad man, also is eligible.

The schedule:

December 9-10—Southeast Oklahoma Teachers, here.

December 13—Phillips 66 of Bartlesville, Okla., here.

December 16-17—Drury College of Springfield, Mo., here.

December 21—University of Oklahoma at Norman.

December 22—Parks Clothiers at Oklahoma City.

January 6-7—Southern Methodist at Dallas.

January 13-14—Texas at Austin.

February 3-4—Baylor, here.

February 10—Texas Christian at Fort Worth.

February 18—Parks Clothiers, here.

February 24-25—Texas A. & M. at College Station.

March 1-2—Rice, here.

The Library

The State Library program held in Little Rock, and attended by two representatives of Hope, was among the most outstanding in the nation in the past year.

Governor Bailey, who advocated establishment of State Aid to Libraries, greeted the delegates attending the convention held at the Little Rock Public Library.

The program consisted of sectional meetings held in the afternoon. A general discussion was made, covering expenses, rules, ways of obtaining money, etc.

The Hope Public Library is operated on much the same order as that of Fort Smith, an "outstanding library," according to plans reviewed by Miss Freddy Shrader.

School and children librarians also attended this meeting between 2 and 3 p. m., stressing the point that all school and Public Librarians should cooperate.

Mrs. David Terry spoke on "The Layman Looks at the Library." Vance Dandridge, author of many books on Ozark life was guest at this meeting.

According to statements of different library representatives the Hope Public Library rates higher than the 17 libraries in area 5 on money spent on purchasing books and number of books circulated.

It also ranks ahead of a number of other libraries in the state.

The following interesting books may be found in the city library.

"For Love or Money," by H. W. Corley.

Porker-Rebel Fist Fight Is Recorded

Sports Writer Gives Version of Incident After Grid Game

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(AP)—Sports writers covering the Mississippi-Arkansas football game agreed Wednesday night the free-for-all fight that ensued after the final whistle resulted from the heat of the contest.

David Bloom, Commercial Appeal football writer, said an Arkansas player leaped on a bench near the dugout leading to the dressing quarters and struck at Winkie Autrey, Mississippi center.

"In a minute other Arkansas and Ole Miss players were throwing fists," Bloom wrote, "and Bubler North, Ole Miss substitute guard, was knocked cold and Willard Bishling, Mississippi quarterback, suffered a cut lip."

"The combat was undoubtedly the result of an incident on the field in the fourth quarter," Bloom explained.

"Zack Smith of Frederick, Okla., the Arkansas end who scored his teams' second touchdown, was knocked unconscious when tackled by Autrey in running an end-around play. Smith was hit in the face by Autrey's elbow."

Smith was taken to a hospital where a doctor said:

"The boy is not seriously hurt. He was knocked unconscious for about 30 minutes, suffering a slight concussion. The cartilage of his nose was badly torn but the X-Ray disclosed no fracture."

"He was still very dizzy three hours after the accident and had a headache. We are keeping him in the hospital for observation, but we anticipate nothing serious and expect him to go home Thursday."

Scores of police and firemen separated hundreds of spectators who caught the "fire" of the conflict from seeing the players exchange blows. No arrests were reported.

More Funds, Need of the University

50% More Students, But Revenue Third Less Than in 1932

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP)—The chief need of the University of Arkansas is additional funds to pay better salaries, and to employ additional teachers, President J. C. Futrell said in his annual report to the school's trustees.

The report, released Thursday, said that within the last five years the enrollment had increased more than 50 per cent, while the state appropriation remained one-third below what it was in 1932.

SOUTH BEND.—Notre Dame has recaptured the synthetic alumni won by the brilliant teams and magic personality of the late Knute Rockne.

One only had to travel to South Bend for the Minnesota game to be certain of this. Something like 20 special trains . . . with cars from as far west as Denver . . . rolled into the Indiana city to fill the 55,000 seats of Notre Dame Stadium for the first time since it was built in 1930.

Notre Dame again is the alma mater of everybody who never went to college. Synthetic alumni once more sing "Cheer, cheer for old Notre Dame" with as much fervor and vastly more volume than undergraduates.

Over Minnesota, Notre Dame stands an excellent chance of going through a season unbeaten for the first time since Rockne's superb club of 1930. Northwestern in Evanston and Southern California in Los Angeles are obstacles, but neither has as many men as much stuff and versatility as the fighting Irish.

It was typical of the Notre Dame opportunities to hand Minnesota the worst defeat the Giants of the North have suffered since Bernie Bierman returned to Minneapolis . . . without making a single first down by rushing, and only two in all.

Two five-yard offside penalties were required to give the Old Gold and Light Blue a first down on the ground. The other came on a pass.

But the lads of the Golden Dome still go for the long ones, and shook Louis Zontini loose on the old out-back play inside tackle for an 84-yard run with the game only six minutes old. Johnny Thiesing went ahead of Zontini through the hole ripped in Minnesota's right side, and Harold Van Every, the safety man, didn't have a Chinaman's chance with two interferences on him.

The Minnesota defense was completely hoodwinked by a scoring pass which ate up 43 yards in the second period, so the Bierman band was soundly beaten at their half. Elmer Loydson outfit put bunk in this one by starting the play as a reverse.

A remarkably accurate throw by Saggau gave Notre Dame its third touchdown in the last 15 seconds. The Denison, Ia., redhead faded back from the Minnesota 17 and pitched the ball to Johnny Kelly who would have to turn to his right . . . away from a defender . . . to catch it in the end zone.

It was the first pass to a Notre Dame right end in memory. It has just happened that the more accomplished Irish receivers have played left end.

Vairo of 1933, Wayne Milner, of '34-5, and Skoglund of '36-7, for examples.

Irish Have Finest Prosh Class in Years

George Franck was the only speedster in the Minnesota backfield when he went out with a pulled muscle in his leg, the Gophers were slower than 11 Ernie Lombardi. Bierman obviously suffered from a lack of reserves, too.

But a team has to have something to repel seven consecutive major opponents, and Notre Dame has plenty. There is every indication that the South Bend institution is off on another long whirl of glory.

It has the material, coaching, tradition, and the inclination. The better prep players want to go to a college with a good football setup. The Notre Dame tag means something when they seek positions as coaches.

You never saw so many football players in one place in your life. There are 84 on the varsity squad alone, and with the interhall league plan a good share of the 3000 students play football. It strikes you that one of Layden's major problems must be keeping track of all his athletes.

This is a young Notre Dame team and it is backed up by the finest freshman class in years.

There is every indication that the curbstome graduates will sing lustily for several years.

Monterey cypress trees are found only in one place: Monterey peninsula, California.

Law's Guardians Learn First Aid for Community Safety

Police officers, trained in Red Cross first aid, resuscitate victim of water accident.

THE extensive safety instruction carried on by the American Red Cross for a quarter of a century has been one of the major factors in arousing the public to accident dangers.

For many years safety instruction through first aid training was carried on principally through industry and the railroads. Within the last decade it has been directed toward education of the general public, the school child, parents, organized groups such as the veterans' organizations, and the police forces of the nation.

Many cities and states have incorporated Red Cross First Aid Courses in the required courses of training for candidates for their police and fire departments. Where a police officer, state patrolman or fireman wears the Red Cross insignia on his uniform, there the public knows is a man prepared to save lives at the scene of an accident.

The Red Cross has recently attacked the problem of deaths on the highway from motor accidents through establishment of Emergency First Aid Stations, and also the death toll from accidents in the home and on the farm. More than a quarter of a million persons were trained in Red Cross first aid last year, and were thus prepared to give intelligent emergency assistance at the scene of an accident, while awaiting the arrival of the doctor.

Want Curls? Pin These On

Here's a crown and bang cluster of curls to pin atop your head when you are upsweped. Simply brush your own short locks of your long bob smoothly upward all the way around, then pin this elaborately curled hair piece in place.

Perfect solution to the problems of the girl who likes to wear her hair only occasionally extra hair pieces—the coiffure news of the moment.

If, cut for the hairstyle you think is most flattering day in and day out, your hair is too short or too long for an upswep, you can buy a topknot of little curls and wear it for evening or a special tea date. Simply brush your hair smoothly upward all the way around, making a small, flat bun on top, then pin the cluster of false curls to it. By the way fashion experts are betting that you'll hear little, if anything, about "up" coiffures after the first of next year.

Handy for Other Coiffures

Upswept or no, many a girl finds a few extra ringlets extremely handy. Two or three of these of real hair which matches exactly the shade of your own can be pinned across the nape of your neck, among your own curls that are none too close together or wherever you need them most.

You can buy hair pieces of large, swooping curls to add height to your figure or of smaller, flat, sculptured curls for a sleeper, more sophisticated look. Puff curls, each on a separate little comb, are simple to fasten in place. The combs are invisible, of course, and so designed that they cannot possibly slip or fall.

Those who have lost practically all of their hair through illness, or whose shingled bobs are growing out all too slowly, will consider reasonably priced, meticulously made extra hair pieces a great personal boon rather than just so much fun. And the girl whose finger at the back of your head. Handy, too, are small, invisible combs which will stay in from morning until night. Also, braids of hair to match your own. Pinned around the crown of your head, encircling the curls on top, one of these will keep the curls up and a small hat on. When you brush your hair (and it should be brushed every night), always use upward and outward strokes. Upward strokes are best for your scalp, of course, and they do a great deal toward helping to train your upped locks to stay up.

We, the Women

By RUTH MILLETT

Heavy Expense Unnecessary to the Success of a Hostess

So often you hear a woman complain that although she plans to give a party, she just knows it will be a failure because she hasn't the money to "do it right." That their worry is needless and the cost of a party has little to do with its success, is pointed out below by Mrs. Ernesta Barlow, popular New York society matron and one of the most successful hostesses in the city. Mrs. Barlow is one of several prominent American women who will contribute during the illness of Ruth Millett, author of this newspaper's popular column entitled "We, the Women."

By ERNESTA BARLOW (Copyright, 1938, NEA Service, Inc.)

To define the qualities which make a charming hostess is as difficult as to define charm itself. One can but set down, from a guest's point of view, some of the things which make hospitality far more agreeable in some houses than in others.

Originally and an easy, unconventional atmosphere have largely taken the place of formality, ten-course dinners and elaborate decorations. I lay stress on the word EASY because an anxious, restless hostess makes me want to get on a bicycle and peddle furiously around the room. If she has planned everything well in advance, if the one or ten servants, as the case may be, have had their instructions beforehand, if the table arrangements are checked, the flowers arranged, the matches and cigarettes plentiful, and the fire ready to blaze in the hearth before she goes up to dress, my hostess can come down to her guests and enjoy herself. One is so much happier with a hostess who is having a good time.

We come in and she greets us at the door of the room. Without gushing, she makes us sense that we are very welcome and we feel more cheerful at once. We look about. Do we know everyone? Personally I hope not, as I like heterogeneous parties. Strangers are pastures new and frequently delightful.

A party which costs very little can be as great a success as one marked by expense. Crowded cocktail parties which mop up all one's obligations at once are less attractive than several small, more intimate affairs. Let the buffet supper replace the former, champagne will be unnecessary, chianti, punch or beer can adequately fill its place. And a "five to seven" the hostess who serves tea behind her own hot water kettle will find her cocktail bar strangely deserted by young and old alike, and delighted guests will draw up their chairs to tell her what a relief real tea is.

Good food is all-important. One new and original dish can earn a great reputation for the hostess than four or five stereotyped courses. Small tables for everyone at a buffet are unnecessary. A card table or two set for the older guests is enough, the others can be for themselves.

Lack of silver or china need not matter at all. The nearest decent store can supply them and paper napkins kept a guest from enjoying himself. While we eat, our hostess moves about from group to group, keeping a watchful eye on the shy guest and the stranger seating them near people with whom they will have something in common or are likely to find congenial. Everyone does not have to be formally introduced.

It goes without saying that the guest who has particular entertainment value in the way of musical talent should not be expected to display it unless he volunteers or agrees willingly at a discreet but eager hint from his hostess. Even very good friends should not be urged. If they do play, the hostess must see to it that there are no interruptions from servants, telephones or arriving guests.

The hostess who maintains her sense of humor when her party is going badly is also most endearing. No one can always make a success of entertaining. Complete failures are in order the world over, and the friend who says to you afterward with a laugh, "Wasn't that a ghastly dinner at my house last night?" removes any feeling of discomfort for her or yourself you may have had.

Perhaps that is it, after all. One's guests must feel comfortable in mind as well as body. I wish I might make them so as easily as I can set down rules for doing it.

See lions are so named because of the lion-like mane possessed by some species.

Charcoal and diamonds are made of the very same element, carbon; yet, diamonds of the poorest quality sell for more than $2000 an ounce, while charcoal is worth only about $15 a ton.

Does Bladder Irritation Wake You

It's not normal. Its nature warning "DANGER AHEAD." Make this 25c test. Use buchu leaves, juniper oil and 6 other drugs made into green tablets. Help the kidneys flush out excess acids and other wastes which can cause the irritation resulting in getting up nights, frequent or scanty flow, burning or backache. Ask any druggist for Bukets. Your 25c back if not pleased in 4 days. Locally at Bryant's Drug Store and John S. Gibson Drug Company.
